Master of Legal Studies
(MLS)

American University of Phnom Penh (AUPP)

AUPP is an English language higher education institution which offers rigorous education grounded in the culture of Cambodia and Asia to foster life-long learning and critical thinking. We strive for academic and professional excellence to produce critical thinkers, innovators, and leaders who will make significant contributions to the society.

Master of Legal Studies (MLS)

In today's world affairs and economy that is adapting to rapid developments in digital technologies, corporations, governments, and society as a whole are navigating an evolving global environment. The Master of Legal Studies programs aim to (1) provide a broad overview of local and international laws and regulations that govern international businesses, (2) engage students in the ongoing discussions on issues related to the use and regulation of digital technologies, and (3) provide an overview of global issues and the role of the state and businesses in development policies and global issues.

Through the study of relevant laws, regulations, and policies in Cambodia and other prominent common and civil law jurisdictions, students will learn to analyse complex global and legal issues that arise in international business, the fast-growing developments of digital technologies, and how these developments have affected the application of laws and policies and different approaches to their solutions.

Students take two courses at the same time. Classes are scheduled to be on weekday evenings and Saturday mornings.
